

To whom it may concern,

I am happy to recommend Julian Strunz, who worked as a Junior Programmer with us at INGAME STUDIOS.

During his time with the team, Julian consistently proved himself to be a reliable and capable young professional. He learned quickly, adapted well, and was able to pick up new tasks and responsibilities with impressive speed. He took ownership of his work and could be trusted to follow through on the tasks assigned to him. And he showed a strong level of self-reliance in organizing his work, which is especially valuable in a junior role.

Julian consistently met the expectations of his role, and in several cases went beyond. One example was his willingness to support our community team by helping create technical tutorials for the game's modding toolkit that he helped develop. This showed initiative and an understanding of how his work could contribute to the broader goals of the studio. That kind of attitude is something I always regard highly.

I also want to clarify that Julian's departure from the studio was not related to his performance or conduct in any way. On the contrary, he performed well in his role and demonstrated the qualities we look for in a programmer. His employment ended purely as a consequence of a broader and unforeseen restructuring.

I believe Julian would be a valuable addition to any team looking to invest in a capable and motivated developer. I am confident in recommending him and I would be happy to provide further details upon request.

Sincerely,

David van Pelt
Technical Director
